THUMBNAILED HISTORY OF U. S. ARMY DIVISIONS

ELEVENTH DIVISION

The Eleventh Division was organized at Camp Meade, Maryland in August 1918. The 24th Field Artillery Brigade was organized and trained at West Point, Kentucky.

The 17th and 85th Infantry were organizations of the Regular Army but all units were made up largely of drafted men.

The Division was prepared for departure overseas in November, 1918, when the signing of the Armistice stopped all further troop movement.

Major General Lewis McCallister was assigned to its command. Except for Regular Army units it was disbanded in February, 1919. Its insignia is a hat of Lafayette in blue superimposed on a red disk.

TWELFTH DIVISION

The Twelfth (Plymouth) Division, composed largely of drafted men from the New England States with a nucleus of men from regular units, was organized at Camp Devens, Massachusetts in August 1918. It arrived overseas early in the summer of 1918 and immediately moved to the front line in the Meuse-Argonne offensive. It was heavily engaged. It took 2,148 prisoners, its casualties totaled 11,223. Major General Clarence Edwards commanded the Division from its organization until October 24, 1918. Its insignia is a blue diamond upon which is superimposed the figure 12 pierced by a bayonet.

SEVENTEENTH DIVISION

The Seventeenth Division, popularly known as the "Yankee Division," was organized in Boston in August 1917, from National Guard troops of the New England States supplemented by a small quota of National Army men. It arrived overseas in August 1917 and went to the front lines in the Meuse-Argonne offensive in February 1918. In April it was involved in the Seicheprey raid and repulsed an enemy attack with heavy losses. In succeeding operations, including the Battle of Chateau-Thierry, the Champagne-Marne offensive, the Aisne-Marne, St. Mihiel and the Meuse-Argonne offensives the Division was heavily engaged. It took 2,148 prisoners, its casualties totaled 11,223. Major General Clarence Edwards commanded the Division from its organization until October 24, 1918. Its insignia is a blue diamond upon which is superimposed the figure 17 pierced by a bayonet.
